The manifestos for the general election need a new agenda. For the past 30 years, people and money have been scooped up by the "industries". This would mean the industrial age. We are not taking sides between one party and another. We think whatever government gets in power, it must be prepared to take some notice.

Some people think for more satisfying ways of life are being questioned, the frustrations of the modern world are being analysed, and new approaches to more satisfying ways of life are being explored.

We think it urgent to get this new thinking into the mainstream of political debate. We are not taking sides between one party and another. We think whatever government gets in power, it must be prepared to take some notice. We are not taking sides between one party and another.

We think it urgent to get this new thinking into the mainstream of political debate. We are not taking sides between one party and another. We think whatever government gets in power, it must be prepared to take some notice. We are not taking sides between one party and another.

We think it urgent to get this new thinking into the mainstream of political debate. We are not taking sides between one party and another. We think whatever government gets in power, it must be prepared to take some notice. We are not taking sides between one party and another.

We think it urgent to get this new thinking into the mainstream of political debate. We are not taking sides between one party and another. We think whatever government gets in power, it must be prepared to take some notice. We are not taking sides between one party and another.